Notes: My arrangement of this beautiful Scottish folk song has the tune with the basses. The backing 'ooh's in the 1st & 2nd verses need to be sung softly therefore. The other parts join in with the words on the 3rd verse for contrast. Enjoy the romance of the verses & the passion of the choruses - the latter should be a rollicking good ride! In most versions the lyrics in the 3rd verse read 'If my true love were to leave me I would surely find another' but I've changed them to 'no other'. This is sometimes sung in other renditions I've heard. Much more romantic and hopeful!

If there are few basses to sing the lead it's a good idea to perhaps have a sprinkling of singers from the altos & sopranos to join the men on verses 1 & 2. In this instance the tenor backing singers would be greater in number than the other backing singers and need to soften their volume accordingly, for balance.

To end the song simply repeat the last phrase 'will ye go, lassie, go' two more times, slowing down at the end of the final one.
